The frame and grills are custom finished in your choice of stain color, or natural oak. The portable pictured has a natural finish on the oak frame, with the grills stained in dark walnut color.

The grills include grill cloth in your choice of color.

Note: the grills are held in place with Velcro and are easily detached for access to internal components.

The music rack slides into a slot above the keyboard tray for transport (note: the Roland C-230 is removed to show base structure).

The Portativ closed and ready for transport or storage.

This view shows the keyboard tray extended to the performance position. The power, audio and pedal cables that plug into the rear panel of the C-230 are visible. Remove one of the front grill panels to attach the cables to the keyboard.

Power is supplied to the Portativ via a plug on the lower right back panel (keyboard side)—any standard extension cord may be used. The quarter-inch jack is for an expression pedal (included).

The Portativ has a built-in casters and a mechanism for raising the organ so that it can be conveniently rolled around on stage. A standard socket wrench is used to raise and lower the case.

Here the organ has been raised higher for a clear view of the casters. Note that the clearance with the floor is approximately one inch—the built-in casters are primarily for use on stage only. When moving the Portativ from venue to venue, standard moving dollies should be used.
